Latest on slug gate <https://www.abc.net.au/news/2023-11-13/i-cook-foods-court-victoria-listeria-outbreak-saga/103097104>

19:05:20 From Julie Parker To Everyone:

Former chief health officer Brett Sutton unfairly shut down a Melbourne catering business after an outbreak of listeria, the Supreme Court has ruled, but a judge has dismissed the company's bid for millions of dollars in damages.

In a case dubbed "slug gate", business owners Ian and Ben Cook walked tearfully out of the Supreme Court on Monday claiming vindication in their long-running fight against the state government, but conceded they would not receive the major financial payout they were after.

"My family has suffered terribly. My staff have also suffered in unimaginable ways. This has cost me my life's work, and it will most likely cost me everything I have ever owned. And yes, I do get upset about this. But then I have to remind myself, this whole matter is not just about me and my family and my former employees anymore. This is about democracy and the kind of country we are willing to live in. Governments, and corrupt people in those Governments, can't be allowed to destroy the lives of innocent people. We must all take a stand if we ever see this happening. I just can't walk away."

Mr. Ian Cook, I Cook Foods Owner

19:08:08 From Julie Parker To Everyone:

But if you read on, you'll see how the destruction of I Cook Foods actually began a decade earlier. You'll see how the men and women behind the world's longest pandemic lockdown started their wave of destruction at I Cook Foods. You will see how a "regulator" in fact became a "commercial competitor".

In 2009, the then Victorian Health Minister Daniel Andrews and the then Federal Minister for Infrastructure and Transport Anthony Albanese, created a catering business called Community Chef based in Altona.

19:08:59 From Julie Parker To Everyone:

Community Chef was funded by the State and Federal governments as well as a number of Victorian Councils, including the City of Greater Dandenong where the I Cook Foods production facility was located. Flush with millions of dollars of taxpayer and ratepayer support, Community Chef would go on to compete with a number of private catering businesses, including I Cook Foods. One of those businesses, ISS, went broke and 80 people lost their jobs because of Community Chef.

19:20:00 From Kalvert To Everyone:

According to a source I found, it is possible to patent a card game. However, the rules for patenting card games have become stricter in recent years, with the patent office requiring card games to have more substance in order for the patent office to grant them a patent. If you only have rules that involve a standard deck of cards, you may not be able to patent the card game. However, if your card game involves a newly invented deck of cards, your chances of getting a patent are substantially higher. The article also suggests that inventing a new deck of cards to go along with your card game will substantially increase the likelihood that the patent office will grant you a patent to protect your card game.

I hope this helps!
