Well worth looking at the Wiki website for the rest of the story, about Nutrition research centre for Defence since 1958. And more.

Little wonder, this was the centre for aboriginals as the town of Ringarooma about 20 km from Scottsdale is called something like the historical capital of Tasmania.

The weather in the whole NE Tasmania region would also be warming with GW. NW Tas is already a bit warmer than the rest of Tasmania.

Houses here in Scottsdale are a bit cheaper than Warracknabeal, and a tenth of the price in Kew, for similar size land and rooms.

About 2,000 people presently live here. Has Hospital, and supermarket. Reasonably close to Launceston, major city with airport and university. Scottsdale Elevation 198m or 650 feet. Local council is Dorset Council, with about 7,000 people across the council area.

Lots of Scottish names of streets here.

There was a TV report on Monday, which I did not see fully, saying that Stanthorpe Q, or nearby Applethorpe, which are high in the mountains with usually cold overnight winter temperatures, had twenty nights, yes in summer February, with minimum temperatures above 20°C, a new record of over twenty at night.

This is what I say about Global Warming. The overnight rise in temperatures is taking up the average temperature of day and night, polar and equator, summer and winter. Now, much past the 14°C average of 50 years ago. Probably 15.5° now, or approaching.

Nevenka has some friends currently travelling in Tasmania doing some fishing; they sent a photo from Nameless Lake !

Scottsdale, formerly known as Ellesmere, is a town in the north-east of Tasmania, Australia. It lies on the Tasman Highway, around 63 kilometres (39 mi) north-east of Launceston and 22 km (14 mi) south-east of the coastal town of Bridport. It is part of the Dorset Council.

History[edit]

The area was first surveyed in 1855 and was described as, "the best soil on the island ... well watered, with a mild climate" by the surveyor James Reid Scott, for whom the town is named. This rings true today as the town, as well as being the regional centre for other north-east towns, is a major agricultural centre.

The first land was selected in 1859 and the hamlet of Ellesmere grew up.[3] Ellesmere Post Office opened on 29 November 1865, and was renamed Scottsdale in 1893.[4]
