Marooned Review by Harriet Cunningham

★★★½

“Is it only last week Australian of the Year Grace Tame told us, “History, lived experience, the whole truth, unsanitised and unedited, is our greatest learning resource. It is what informs social and structural change”? Marooned is a play that fulfils this urgent purpose, using communal story-telling, aka theatre, to confront Australia’s epidemic of life-threatening despair, shame and grief. It does so with humour and compassion and honesty. It needs to be seen.

The Sydney Morning Herald

19:12:42 From Julie Parker to Everyone:

Each of the characters' stories represents a different group in our community, but all reveal how delicate is the human psyche, how fragile is our mental health and how tenuous our grip on this life.

Marooned is a revolution in Suicide Prevention because it entertains and holds an audience's attention, and while it powerfully conveys its message it manages to leave you feeling uplifted.

I laughed, I cried, I felt. It's raw and extremely real. The actors are beyond amazing, the writing is phenomenal. It was an occasional shifting of bodies that brought you back to the reality that reminded you that this was a play.

~Natalie Powel

19:13:50 From Julie Parker to Everyone:

I think it's fair to say that any play that holds your attention for 90 minutes is something special. Having been in the audience, I can tell you this is that play. Miss it at your peril.
