A private school in London is opening the UK's first teacherless classroom taught by artificial intelligence.

David Game College will be opening its teacherless course for 20 GCSE students who will learn using artificial intelligence platforms on computers and virtual reality headsets.

These students pay around £27,000 (AU$52,000) a year to attend the boarding school.

The school's co-principal, John Dalton, told Sky News that although there are "many excellent teachers out there," "we're all fallible."

usually offers are in relation to civil matters - so she should not have to pay any costs - costs is not my area of practice so I can't make an educated comment. At any rate - they won't be entitled to a lot given it's 1/3 of the costs of trial - and if they wasted money on it bad luck

It was a Civil case in VIC County Court. Monica turned down offer to settle $15,000. Judge awarded $4000 for 2 of 3 arrests were unlawful. $340,000 costs less 30% discount less Monica's costs $55,000. Plus Monica has to $10k for witness costs. Less $4,000 damages awarded to Monica. Hence about $200k costs owed by Monica.

late 14c., "poisonous substance" (a sense now archaic), from Latin virus "poison, sap of plants, slimy liquid, a potent juice," from Proto-Italic *weis-o-(s-) "poison," which is probably from a PIE root *ueis-, perhaps originally meaning "to melt away, to flow," used of foul or malodorous fluids, but with specialization in some languages to "poisonous fluid" (source also of Sanskrit visam "venom, poison," visah "poisonous;" Avestan vish- "poison;" Latin viscum "sticky substance, birdlime;" Greek ios "poison," ixos "mistletoe, birdlime;" Old Church Slavonic višnja "cherry;" Old Irish fi "poison;" Welsh gwy "poison").

The meaning "agent that causes infectious disease" emerged by 1790s gradually out of the earlier use in reference to venereal disease (by 1728); the modern scientific use dates to the 1880s. The computer sense is from 1972.
