At lunchtime today, my sister-in-law, Morgan, sent me this information

Hi Gerry, Have a look at the price of this beach box. "Mornington Peninsula beach box's $910,000 to $1m listing higher than median Melbourne home."

<https://www.theguardian.com/australia-news/2025/jan/09/mornington-peninsula-beach-box-1m-listing-boat-shed-victoria-australia>

I read the article and the accompanying Guardian article, and replied to Morgan with similar to this:

Dear Morgan,

I looked at the article, and then read The Guardian's plea for subscription which says modern authoritarian societies, amongst various items, "nor (make) efforts to curb global heating'.

Of course, of course, of course, this Beach Box or Boat Shed is worth a million dollars. See next entry:

19:28:19 From Gerard C to Everyone:

A site with almost no title. No permission to live within. Little facilities.

But, but, but, this particular box has the advantage of being uphill about 4m above sea level.

So, when the first 5% of Antarctica melts, this shed will still be a metre out of the water.

But when the next 2% melts (ie 7%), then water around your ankles, only twice a day, at high tide.

So, probably has a ten year life from 2025.

What a bargain, then; effectively really only $100,000 a year 'rent' until the water laps at your feet.

And no title, no insurance cover for salt water inundation. Maybe you can recycle the besser blocks.

Of course, another person might not share my views that sea levels might rise, and that person might be very happy to own a beach box like this one.

19:28:25 From Gerard C to Everyone:

I just have a faint feeling that your hill home at Mornington is a tad better value.

Kind regards, Gerry.

Morgan replied: Hi Gerry, Don't know what to say....am laughing too much!

Maybe you FOAM participants will laugh too.

Yeah, they can't save anything if they don't have their own building perhaps

20:01:58 From Gerard C to Everyone:

During the last week of 2015, I watched a television program on ABC 2's, Catalyst, about the rate of fire burning through a home.

On stage, they had a family of four - mum, dad, daughter, son. I think the Victorian fire brigade people, within a big factory hall, re-created an exact room like the 11 year son's room. They matched his furniture, computer, desk, bed, even his soccer ball.

Then the fireman set alight a small fire in one corner. At two minutes and six seconds, from memory, the room's fire had grown so intense that it reached flashover point where the whole room suddenly ignited into one fireball.

The fire commander said this happened because almost everything in the room was made of some form of plastic - even the soccer ball exploded. He said plastic is really just petrol or petroleum products. (Even that room's insulation would probably be petrol-based plastic.)

Gerry See next.

Part two: The fire commander then cited a similar experiment they did some forty years ago (1970's), which took fifteen or twenty minutes to reach flash-over. He said most of the furniture in that room was based on hessian, a plant material. I think if the fire re-enactment had been done in the 1910's, then industrial hemp products would have formed most of the furniture, with a much longer flashover point.

I personally have seen an experiment in Queensland at Maleny in 2012 with industrial hemp; a blow torch was applied to an industrial hemp insulation piece for several minutes without it catching fire.

20:03:00 From Gerard C to Everyone:

Part 3: I relate all this, because of the Middle East fire, an hour before their midnight starting 2016 New Year's Day, in Dubai where a 63 storey building was alight from top to bottom. This would have been full of plastic materials, made from petrol, possibly their own oil. An explosive flashpoint within the 20th storey apartment, where the fire started, was probably reached within a few minutes.

20:03:23 From Gerard C to Everyone:

Part 4: This is why I would like to use industrial hemp insulation in the walls, floor and ceilings. I also want to use 7mm plywood as the lining board; I'm not sure of its fire rating, but it will mean that its use on the timber studs forms part of the structural integrity of the house, increasing the cyclone rating.

In late 2015, there were some big bush fires at Scotsburn just eight kilometres away from Lal Lal. Then, during the Christmas week, there had been big fires which burnt over hundred homes at Wye River near Apollo Bay, Vic. I hoped the geodesic dome house my brothers David, Tony, and I built in the 1970's at Beech Forest might be safe. In an earlier fire at Apollo Bay, the surgery of Dr John Eckersley had been destroyed; he moved then to Bribie Island, Queensland. John and I had been school friends in the 1960's at Xavier College in Kew.
