Western Australian State election

This election is scheduled for Saturday 8th March 2025. There are 59 lower house seats or Legislative Assembly seats; each with a separate electorate. And there are 37 seats in the Legislative Council; with an across the state single electorate.

Legislative Assembly

In the Legislative Assembly, the Labor Party, with Roger Cook as Premier, currently hold 53 seats; really this was a “safety – covid” result last time. The Nationals with Shane Love as leader, have 4 seats. And, the Liberals, with Libby Mettam as leader, have 2 seats.

On Saturday 8th March 2025, I think the Nationals will pick up about six seats to 10, and the Liberals will obtain about an extra fifteen seats to 17. This is 27. If there is a bigger swing, then perhaps we might get to 30 which is a majority out of 59 seats.

19:06:38 From Gerard C to Everyone:

Western Australia is about the only state where the incumbent government can probably claim to be actually reducing the state’s debt. Although, it had run it up immensely.

19:08:16 From Gerard C to Everyone:

I personally, really do not expect a federal election to be announced until Monday 10th March 2025. (2 days after WA election)

Then the federal election will be as late as possible, because 'every day' is another day of power for the current prime minister and, so, keep power every day that is possible.

You can get live birth cert later. You don't have to get a birth cert whilst in hospital.

19:29:07 From Belinda to Everyone:

At VCAT, parties generally represent themselves, but they are allowed to have legal representation in certain cases. Whether a lawyer is permitted depends on the type of case and whether VCAT grants permission for legal representation. If one party has a lawyer and you do not, you can request that VCAT require both parties to self-represent, but this is not guaranteed. VCAT will consider factors such as fairness and complexity of the case before making a decision.

Julie Parker, SONIA: 👍

19:29:38 From Deb F to Everyone:

The councils are overridden by the state government. Knox council declined some building permits, then builders go to VCAT and they always override the council

19:35:54 From Gerard C to Everyone:

The upper house in WA will have 37 members elected from one large statewide electorate, instead of the 6 members from each of six electorates currently. The 6 electorates does weigh against the city as three are country and three are Perth. But the one electorate allows people with 1/38 th to get elected; so there might be some Independents elected. And more Liberals, less Labor, less Nationals. Gerry.

The Local Government Act 2020 (Vic) states that councils are "democratically elected," yet the decision-making process is often dominated by unelected council officers and the CEO. This may contradict the principle of representative democracy as enshrined in Victorian law and the broader Australian constitutional framework.

The average rain at Crohamhurst is given as 1,795 mm per year, although 1898 had 4,119 recorded. So, in 2024, 3,688 is 205%, ie more than double, the standard average rainfall. As a comparison, Melbourne rainfall is usually only about 600 mm a year. Qld has plenty of rain to have hydro-electricity; just lower-cost medium sized plants on many rivers in the Great Dividing Range.

And I repeat, Tasmania is self-sufficient with hydro-electricity, and Queensland has many times more water in streams and rivers than Tasmania.

yes re CEOs of councils - they are employed by the government and basically follow government guidelines rather what the local electorate need. They can countermand any voted decisions by counsellors, so there is no real power for the people in councils. We have had issues with this in Banyule Council.

On Tuesday 25th February 2025 at 10:09 am: Air traffic authorities (ie Australian) only discovered Chinese warships were conducting a live-fire exercise in the Tasman Strait 30 minutes after it began thanks to an alert by a Virgin pilot rather than a warning from government officials. We can see from the recent floods in North Queensland just how important the concept of building a bit higher is important. And the news today from this tropical area about five people dying from the water-borne disease melioidosis possibly indicates the need to ensure higher homes preventing water from entering in flood events, especially tropical flood events.

David Crisafulli is certainly the right man as premier when he visited Ingham and north Queensland during the floods a few weeks ago, as he was raised in Ingham, representing a seat in the district. Only later moving to the Gold Coast. He said some shops in this town he had always considered were well above flood levels were also inundated
